Positioning Architecture

Given the constant evolving nature of a place, expanding the frame of reference deeper in time, and broader in context can provide useful perspectives beyond what is 'present' today. The talk will outline the interdependence of all things and look at the dynamics of change across time and space. It will draw from holistic perspectives emerging across disciplines to better understand systems of linked ecological, economic, and institutional processes. The talk will use the lens of time to position architecture as temporal relational structures, physical and nonphysical and design as an act of shaping these relational flows of matter, energy and ideas to a more productive state. - Presented by John Choi from CHROFI
